Excerpt: . . . once or twice before sowing, as it more thoroughly pulverizes the soil and makes it more mellow. Then either harrow or cultivate the seed in with a small cultivator plow, and follow with the roller. Whether the clover should be pastured after mowing, or permitted to obtain a luxuriant growth to turn under, is somewhat a disputed question, each having its advocates. If the clover is permitted to grow for the purpose of turning, under, it should be suffered to become ripe, so as to diminish the acid gases arising from its decay and fermentation; the pasturing system is preferred by us as affording not only a large quantity of foood for stock, whose manure, left on the field, possesses as fertilizing properties as the leaves and stems of the clover. It is the roots of the clo ver which tend to enrich the land nd render it light and porous, peculiarly well adapting it to the culture of wheat. As a general rule, wheat should not succeed wheat, or the other small grains. It thrives the best on new breaking, or after corn, peas, beans, the roots, and all hoed crops, and especially does well on a rich clover lay. It is not good policy to apply directly to the wheat crop a large quantity of long unferinented manure. The soil should previously be enriched by plowing under this kind of manure for corn or other crops, which immediately precede the wheat crop....
