The domestic dog (Canis lupus familiaris) is a subspecies of the gray wolf (Canis lupus), a member of the Canidae family of the mammalian order Carnivora. The term domestic dog is generally used for both domesticated and feral varieties. The dog was the first domesticated animal and has been the most widely kept working, hunting, and pet animal in human history. The word dog can also refer to the male of a canine species, as opposed to the word bitch which refers to the female of the species. Recent studies of well-preserved remains of a dog-like canid from the Razboinichya Cave in the Altai Mountains of southern Siberia concluded that a particular instance of early wolf domestication approximately 33, 000 years ago did not result in modern dog lineages, possibly because of climate disruption during the Last Glacial Maximum. The authors postulate that at least several such incipient events have occurred. A study of fossil dogs and wolves in Belgium, Ukraine, and Russia tentatively dates domestication from 14, 000 years ago to more than 31, 700 years ago. Another recent study has found support for claims of dog domestication between 14, 000 and 16, 000 years ago, with a range between 9, 000 and 34, 000 years ago, depending on mutation rate assumptions. Dogs value to early human hunter-gatherers led to them quickly becoming ubiquitous across world cultures. Dogs perform many roles for people, such as hunting, herding, pulling loads, protection, assisting police and military, companionship, and, more recently, aiding handicapped individuals. This impact on human society has given them the nickname mans best friend in...
