Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from An Outline of the American School System: With Remarks on the Establishment of Common Schools in England The description of the American Common School System contained in the following pages, is derived from the Report of the Rev. J. Fraser, M.A., Assistant Commissioner, who was sent to America to inquire into the method of education which prevails there. The study of this full and impartial Report shows how all important the American authorities regard this question, and how completely both Government and people rely on the diffusion of the means of education for the success of their institutions, and the general prosperity of the country. All the thought, care, and expense which Continental nations bestow on military organizations, the Americans seem to throw into the development of the intelligence of the people by a thorough and general system of instruction. With them it is not a question of benevolence and charity, but one of national policy. Their attitude is like that of a good farmer, who spares no expense, or care, in preparing and tilling the land he cultivates, and in choosing the seed he sows. The following brief outline, extracted almost literally from the Report (and the Notes and Appendices thereto), while it will give some idea of the American system, can give none of the valuable information, - the facts, and opinions collated in the book itself.
